Louisiana Missing Opportunities to Give Young Adult Parents and Their Kids a Boost

New Casey Foundation report illuminates needs and barriers facing Louisiana's young parents and their children

NEW ORLEANS — With limited access to opportunities to advance their education and find family-sustaining jobs, Louisiana's 69,000 young adult parents face hurdles to support their children and fulfill their own potential, according to Opening Doors for Young Parents, the latest KIDS COUNT® policy report from the Annie E. Casey Foundation.

The Casey Foundation's KIDS COUNT grantee in Louisiana, Agenda for Children, joined the call for action so these young parents can contribute to the state's communities and economy.

The fifty-state report reveals that, at 16 percent, Louisiana is above the national average (10 percent) of youth ages 18 to 24 who are also young parents.

The report highlights the following statewide trends and areas of concern:

- 87,000 children in Louisiana have young parents ages 18 to 24.
- 76 percent of children of young parents in Louisiana live in low-income families, one of the highest percentages in the country.
- Only 13 percent of young parents ages 18 to 24 have completed an associate degree or higher.
- 49 percent of Louisiana's young parents are people of color, facing challenges exacerbated by discrimination and systemic inequities, with their children standing to suffer the most.

"The data is clear – Louisiana needs to capitalize on the energy and promise of our young parents," said Dr. Anthony Recasner, CEO of Agenda for Children. "We have a unique opportunity to improve outcomes for two generations by connecting more young parents to education, good jobs and stable housing."

The report spotlights a national population of more than 6 million, including 2.9 million young adult parents, ages 18 to 24, and 3.4 million children nationwide living with young parents. Opening Doors for Young Parents illuminates the most common obstacles young adult parents face, including incomplete education, lack of family-sustaining employment opportunities, lack of access to quality child care, inadequate and unstable housing and financial insecurity.

These barriers threaten not only these young adults, but also their young children, setting off a chain of diminished opportunities for two of our nation's future generations. But the report includes recommendations for addressing the obstacles that young parents face, most of which can be driven by policy solutions at the state level.

The Casey Foundation stresses the importance of a two-generation approach to equip young parents for success. "If we don't support young people when they become parents, we are cheating two generations out of having a positive future," warned Casey Foundation President and CEO Patrick McCarthy. "We can help young adult parents develop the skills they need to raise their children, contribute to their communities, and drive our national economy forward."

Agenda for Children further stresses the importance of helping the state's young parents access educational and employment opportunities. In an increasingly competitive workforce landscape, education can make a significant difference in earning power for families. However, as the data demonstrate, young adult parents here in Louisiana, like young parents nationwide, do not have the post-secondary education or specialized skills to obtain family-sustaining jobs.
